This article is essentially a follow up to a piece by The Jackdaw's revered editor David Lee, published in The Times on July 25th of this year. In it he detailed just what a fiasco the Arts Council's contribution to an otherwise successful Olympic year £5.4 million sent, and nothing to show for it.

"Twelve months on," he noted, "[and] we can evaluate more clearly what we received for a sum that approaches the council's entire visual arts budget. The short answer is nothing; nothing memorable or of enduring merit – it was all frittered away on trivia. Not a single painting, print, sculpture or ceramic in any gallery. Not a mural or stained glass window in any civic building. No worthy public sculpture. Not even a sprawling installation or soporific video destined for a gallery warehouse. The sum total is three crocheted lions at Twycroft Zoo and a boat made from 1200 donated wooden objects currently moored... somewhere."
