Reilly Jamison was a widow trying to find love again with an assortment of Internet dates, when she stopped for gas one night and met Aryan Khan. Owner of the gas station and an Afghan ex-patriot, he sparked her interest and seemed to recognize a kindred spirit within her despite their seemingly polar differences. He was handsome and enigmatic, and she was tired of boring, predictable dates who did nothing for her libido and actually annoyed her to no end.

Reilly awakened from the chrysalis of stagnation that had been her life since her husband, Jamie's death. Suddenly her art gallery was thriving with vibrant artists again, and her heart was alive with hope and the prospect of true love. Aryan was the soul mate she had been waiting for, and when they connected, passions flew and love was kindled in the hearts of two people who'd thought that love was lost to them forever.

As her desire for the handsome Afghan scholar deepened, she realized that although he was a stranger from a faraway land, he shared many of the same traits as her beloved Jamie. Both men were professors of ancient studies, both were fit and athletic and both shared the same proclivity -- spanking their beloved when they deemed it necessary.

Reilly didn't know if she was blessed or cursed at finding love with her perfect stranger...

Mature subject matter for adults only. 5.5 x 8.5 perfect paperback, 142 pages, 40,035 words
