Twenty-four Hours Margaret Mahy

It is seventeen-year-old Ellis's first night at home after graduating from prep school. By chance he bumps into Jackie Cattle, whom he remembers from grade school. Jackie is a couple of years older than Ellis, a drifter, disreputable, yet with an odd charm and a disarming wit.

For the next twenty-four hours, Ellis enters an extraordinary world on the fringe of society that he never knew existed. Jackie introduces him to life at the Land-of-Smiles, a dilapidated motel where nightly a strange collection of local characters gather to drink and talk. Two attractive sisters, Ursa and Leona, the elder studying to be a lawyer, live there. Leona loves and takes care of a baby whose mother stops in only once in a while. Then the baby disappears, and Ellis is thrust into a wild, sometimes almost violent search for the child.

This is a stunning novel that grips the reader as it sweeps to its conclusion. Rich characterization, breathtaking action, and an ultimately heartwarming solution distinguish this latest triumph of Margaret Mahy.

Brenda Moulton:

As a pupil, I often feel bored when I am not reading. If my teacher asked me to go to the library or make a summary for some e-book, I complained. Just small students that have reading as their soul or real hobby. They just do what the professor wants, like being asked to go to the library. They go to the library but do not read seriously. Any student who feels that reading is not important, boring, and also cannot see colorful pictures on there. Yeah, it is becoming complicated. Books are very important in your case. As we know that in this era, there are many ways to get whatever we really wish for. Likewise, word says, ways to reach China's country. So, this Twenty-four Hours can make you experience more interest in reading.
